Native Black Poplar Project

News January 2026

Native black poplar is UK's rarest native timber tree and is an iconic part of our local landscape. Last year we started our project to encourage planting of native black poplars to maintain them into the future.

Over 30 plants were distributed to 12 locations. But we know the weather made last summer a tough year for tree planting so we expect some of our contacts may want to try again.

We will have plants available for planting this year in late January and February.

If you have a suitable area in Castlemorton or a nearby Parish and would like to plant a native black poplar or want advice on whether your site looks suitable, then please get in touch via our e mail address.

If you have a tree that you think is a native black poplar but would like to have it checked then we are also interested in hearing from you.
